

I've been a member of SNACC for a long time now having attended the annual meetings year after year. I've seen the society mature in very positive ways. I would like to contribute to future positive growth of SNACC as the eminent society for neuroscientists who are in critical care and anesthesiology.

Like many of you, I am an active clinician giving neuroanesthesia care to patients with complex medical problems under challenging conditions. We are ambassadors for our specialty. We carry the message of our specialty. A strong and vibrant society is a key component to health of our specialty.

I've made contributions to SNACC first as a member of the communication committee followed by the education committee. I then took over as the newsletter editor and transformed it to something we could be proud of as our society's face. The newsletter has matured under my direction and with the dedicated contribution from SNACC members to become a modern and relevant publication. I now continue as the executive editor for the newsletter allowing more junior members take the lead. By becoming a director, I would like to contribute more to make SNACC more relevant to all neuroscientist worldwide whether they be neuroanesthesiologist or neurocritical care specialists. SNACC has great potential having truly experts in neuroscience and this needs to be exploited to further advance our position in the field.

Thank you for considering my candidacy for a director in SNACC.
